PRODUCTS LIABILITY

Defective Forklifts and Workplace Injuries

Many companies throughout the United States rely on their workers to operate forklifts every day. These large pieces of moving machinery are used to load and unload trucks, move heavy items, and clear space on loading docks, but they can pose significant hazards to workers.

Your Rights after a Machinery Injury

Manufacturers of industrial equipment such as electrical equipment and heavy machinery are held to certain standards for safe design, manufacture, and installation. Workers using factory equipment and power tools are especially vulnerable to potential hazards on the job and suffering a serious injury as the result of a defective product.

CAR ACCIDENTS

Dangers of Winter Car Driving

During the winter months, Pennsylvania gets a great deal of cold weather and freezing precipitation. Although there is much to enjoy about the winter season, winter weather is the cause of many car accidents. According to the U.S. Department of Transportation, 24 percent of all weather-related accidents are caused by snow, ice, or slush.

Self-Driving Vehicles: Questions of Safety and Liability

In the last 10 to 15 years, developers and automobile manufacturers worldwide have funneled nearly 100 billion dollars into the development of self-driving, or automated, vehicle technologies. Although many proponents claim that automated vehicles will significantly reduce roadway fatality and injury rates in addition to decreasing traffic congestion, the technology is still largely in its developmental phase. There are two especially important questions when it comes to self-driving vehicles: is their technology as safe as it promises to be and who, or what, is legally responsible when an accident happens?

WORKPLACE INJURIES

Getting Help After Suffering a Catastrophic Workplace Accident

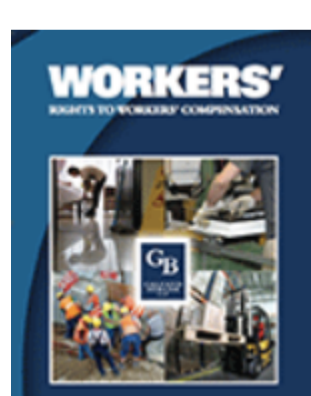

Workers across the country are vulnerable to all types of accidents and injuries. When workplace accidents rise to a catastrophic level, they have severe consequences for the injured worker and the worker's family. The devastating injuries and loss that workers and their families can suffer as the result of a catastrophic accident often include serious emotional trauma and financial strain that lasts long after the accident happened.
