

Halloween is almost here. Although many people are busy figuring out their costumes or putting up ghastly and ghoulish decorations, it is still important to take some precautions. Halloween can be especially dangerous for children and teens, but the good news is that there are plenty of relatively simple steps people can take to stay safe and keep things fun. To ring in the upcoming spooky season, we have compiled some helpful safety tips below.

PRODUCTS LIABILITY RECOVERY

$5 Million Recovery for Scalp Degloving Injury

A 29-year-old factory worker and married mother of three children suffered catastrophic injuries when she crawled under an inadequately guarded machine to remove a jam. While she was under the machine working to free the jam, a rotating shaft caught her hair and pulled off most of her scalp. A nearby worker heard her screams and rushed to shut down the machine. Emergency responders cut her free and urgently transported her to the hospital.

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENTS

National School Bus Safety Week

Each year, during the third week of October we observe National School Bus Safety Week. This year, the public education program designed to address the importance of school bus safety, runs from the 16th to the 20th of October. If you, your friends or loved ones have school-aged children, school bus safety and bus design are undoubtedly important topics in your household. Let's take a look at what the National Association for Pupil Transportation (NAPT) says parents, students, teachers, motorists, school bus operators, school administrators and other interested parties can do to improve school bus safety for the nation's youth.

MEDICAL MALPRACTICE

New Study Shows Just How Dangerous Emergency Rooms Are for Kids

Children account for roughly 22% of the United States' population, yet according to a new study, emergency rooms around the country are grossly underprepared to treat them during a medical crisis or serious illness. After a thorough investigation, the Wall Street Journal (WSJ) discovered that only 14% of ERs nationwide obtain certifications deeming them as "ready" to treat kids or designating them as children's hospitals. Despite countless warnings from legislators and health authorities for decades, children and young adults remain at risk for receiving substandard, potentially life-threatening medical care from unqualified emergency providers around the country.
